He's in an impossible position
 Mother has died
 Both sides are refusing to negotiate.

I agree with Nicholas because I feel that the adjudicator has no right to tell Alem (who has been in the war) what is going on in his own country. Nicholas made very good points of the single parent thing now. Also, when the adjudicator says to move they might have to travel through a really dangerous part to get there, to the safe part of the country.

Single word analysis

Chapter 3: "They beat my face and my stomach and when I was on the ground they just kept kicking me very hard" (page 43)

Single Word:
 "beat"

Literal meaning:
 Physically hurting someone.

Inference: It suggests that Alem was beaten for being Ethiopian.

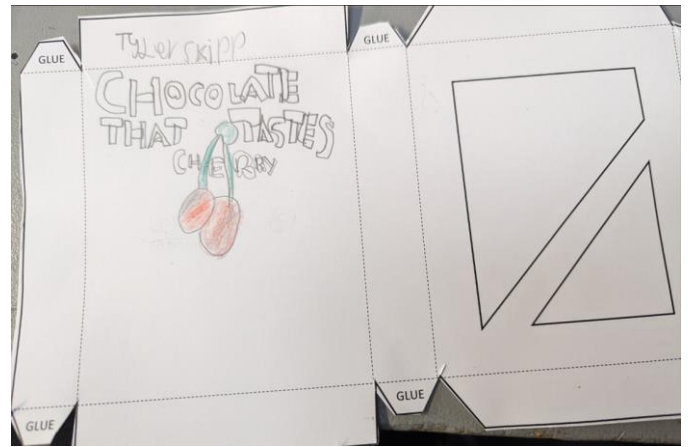

Image it creates: This creates a powerful image of 20 year olds beating up Alem who is only fourteen.

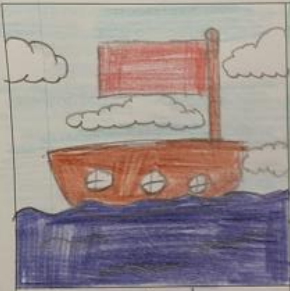

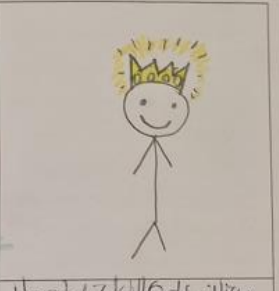

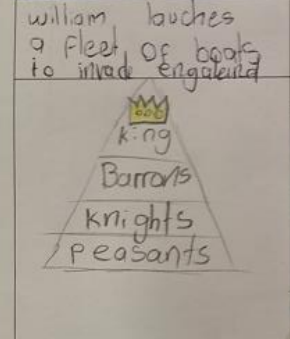

Effect on the reader
 This makes the reader feel empathetic and guilty that Alem was beaten up for where he came from.

"In the extract, the writer portrays war as violent. 'Blood stains on the dresses of all our women.' This use of personification as a ~~sw~~ Hyperbole suggests that every ~~lives~~ woman has been exposed to the horrors of war, they have experienced terrifying events. The use of the adjective stain suggests these experiences will be with them forever. The reader would feel great sympathy for the women.

REA-Q How does Alvi present her feelings toward her identity?

Alvi presents her feelings towards her identity as a positive feeling as it says 'glistening like an orange split open'. The word orange ^{colour} suggests ^{it's a very} warmth and happiness, which suggests that her Pakistani culture makes her feel excited that she has been welcomed into her culture. The word 'split' could also be ~~mean~~ be suggesting that an orange is ugly when it hasn't been opened but when you do open it, it is a beautiful, bright shade of orange, which could describe the dress as, when the box is shut it can't show the ~~the~~ ^{marvellous} ~~dazzling~~ ^{is dazzling} dress but when it opens it becomes a glistening beautiful ~~dress~~. This is a simile. The colour orange can also mean fun which could make her feel like it's childish because it is so bright and colourful and in your face. Furthermore in the quote 'it didn't impress my school friend' which makes her feel embarrassed but the friend could feel confused because she might of never seen anything like it before and didn't know how to compliment it.
